HE KILLED HER.

A BRUTAL HUSBAND SHOOTS HIS WRONGED WIFE AND SLAYS BIMSELF.

Richard B. Carter's Double Crime-Tragic Ending of a Hasty Marriage-Bullets for Both.

(New York Herald.)

A sudden infatuation, a hasty marriage, quickly followed by separation, and a double murder by a brutal husband, form the chapters of a tragedy that found its ending on a public thoroughfare at an early hour last eve-

Less than eight months ago Richard B. Carter, of No. 260 west Twenty-first street, met, wooed, and won Mrs. Teresa Adams, of No. 477 wast Twenty-second street. Inside of a month they were married, within four months they had separated, and now the husband is dead and the wife is confined in the New York Hospital suffering from probably fatal ballet-wounds inflicted at his bands.

Then a transformation seemed to come over the bridgeroom, and before a month clapsed ripotes of discord were visible upon sea, Carter become a st irregular channels; ecame nimost brutal, and his former sobriety changed into periods of beastly intoxica-tion. He capped the climax by refusing to work or contribute anything toward the support of the house. He had married a bride was independent of a for as possible to concent the true situation of affairs.

ann. Adams were lottowed, hunted, and insulted every time they appeared upon the street. The banished husband suddenly be-came a furious maniac, and the cirls were compelled to run from him in dread of viosupport them all on her carnings from the boarding-house.

Sergeaut Schmittberger, who had charge of the case, called at Carter's late residence and searched the dead man's effects to see if there was anything to be found bearing upon the case. There was nothing discovered but the following note, written to Carter by Mrs. Adams, but evidently having no particular hearing on the case:

"Richard,—Who is that you gave your picture to? What telegraph was put in your hand? Please explain these things to me. It is necessary, Carter. There are other things necessary for you to do for me which you will understand.

There was no date in the note and nothing to indicate the time it had been received.

the New York Hospital suffering from probably fatal bullet-wounds inflicted at his hands.

It is a singular story.

Carter was fairly educated and of good appearance. He was forty-two years of 200, and had a grown-up daughter by a former wife. Through a friend fie was induced to call upon Mrs. Adams, who kept a boarding-house, to make arrangements for bimself and daughter to live there. Terms were agreed upon and the Carters were duly installed the next day. Mr. Carter seemed an exemplary character, and soon wen the friendship and esteem of the whole household. At that time he was superintendent of the stevedores in the employ of the Atlas Steamship Line. foot of west Twenty-fifth street. Most of his evenings he spent at home, and he seemed a contented man.

Mrs. Adams was a bright, intelligent matron of forty years, with four charming daughters. When she first met. Carter she immediately became interested and paid him marked attention, which quickly ripened into something stronger. Carter made rapid strides into the widow's affections, and in two weeks it was known that a marrivge engagething stronger. There upon the floor in a pool of blood, chad only in his night-shirt, lay Phinney.

A CHANGE FOR THE WORSE.

These a transformation and of good appearance. He dad an ambulance who in the double place in the customy date was unable of wake a formal ante-morten statement. The police, however, can find no trace of burglars in the house and believe that Phinney committed suicide.

It was about 3 o'clock in the merming was been placed by the marked attention, which quickly ripened into some thing stronger. Carter made rapid strides into the cries of Murder! "Police!" The policeman ran to No. 11 Radde Place. On the stoop was a man in came into the room and had an ambulance summoned. Sergeant Gregory then entered he did so Phinney said,

"Hello! Sergeant."
"Hello!" responded Gregory, "how did this happen?"
"Burglars," was the faint response. "I woke up when a dark lantern was flashed in my face. I jumped out of bed. One of them grabbed me, white I caught hold of the other. Then he shot me, and I fell. Then they ran out.".

An investigation was made at once. Phinan investigation was made at once. Full-ney had sleep in the back parlor, and every-thing was in disorder, and the drawers of the bureau had been pulled out, a heavy rocking-chair overturned, and upon the bureau lay the remnants of three shattered wine-glasses She continued to do so until three months ago, when in some mysterious manner the news reached her that Carter had a living wife, and, in fact, was reputed to be the owner of several such luxuries. A little investigation led to the fact that Carter was not long ago taken to Jersey City to answer a charge of bigamy. Armed with this intelligence the banding-bouse keeper denounced officers scrutinizing the bullet-mark in the wood-work. "The first shot did that. Then be fired again and bit me."

Sergeant Gregory, with Mr. Carpenter, then made a tour of the premises. The windows were all securely fastened and had not been disturbed. There were no foottyints in the yard and it was evident that no one had forced an entrance from that direction. It was then learned that when Mr. Carpenter had come down stairs be had found the front door open. Every other door in the building was locked when the police arrived. "Burglars never did this," said the Sergeant to the family, but they all scouted the lidea of suicide. As Phinney was being carried to the ambulance Sergeant Gregory asked if anything was missing. Phinney overhead the question and answered:

"I suppose they have taken everything." Shortly after reaching the hospital he became unconscious, in which state he died. Iuspector McKellar, Detectives Zundt and Price, of the Central-Office squad, and Cent.

A PECULIAR SCENE.

A peculiar scene occurred at the Baptist church in Weldon a day or two since. Rev. Mr. Morton, the pastor, made a short address, during which he said no one can tell when he will be called away from this world, and pessibly it might be he who was then speaking. He pronounced the benediction, and just as he was uttering the closing words he dropped to the floor in a dead faint. There was great excitement in the church. Many was great excitement in the church. Many were groaning, and nearly all were in tears. Friends rushed up and did what was necessary, and he was restored to consciousness. Many thought him dead, however. The scene was remarkable in the highest degree. It restive identification means anything If positive identification means anything the situation of the man under arrest here for Scott Partin is growing critical for him.

Outside of this is the question of Victoria's settlements. As ex-Empress these will be munificent under law and custom. If, however, her husband's occupancy of the throne was illegal, and if, as the "reptile press" have not been slow to claim, she and Dr. Mackenzie were guilty conspirators in thwarting Frederick's desires with a money object in view, then her obtaining of an ex-Empress's allowance will be doubtful. However that may be, her enemies are in power, and bitter to the last degree. Rismarek's action is simply brutal, as all the vulgar and malignant attacks of the Chancellerie organs must be permitted, if they are not fostered, by him. William the Emperor is indifferent. It is greatly feared Emperor is indifferent. It is greatly feared that nothing that Dr. Mackenzle can say will do much good.
